

Basques contemporains film series

As part of the “Saison Québec – Pays Basque” cultural exchange project, the Cinémathèque Québécoise hosts a series of films from Québec and the Basque Country featuring animations, documentaries, historical films, social dramas, dance and gender issues.

DANTZA

- On September 9 at 9:15 pm. Buy tickets.
- Directed by Telmo Esnal, 2018, 98 minutes, musical / drama.

Based on symbols and metaphors from Basque dances, Dantza is an imaginative musical film about the cycle of life and the development of society. Dance is used to deal with universal subjects in this film: amongst other things, survival, beliefs, celebrations, love and the never-ending struggle against death. The simple, clear narrative is backed up by songs, movement and rhythm (Cineuropa).

- Directed by Roberto Castón, 2009, 128 minutes, drama.

The valley of Arratia in August 1991. Ander, a farmer well into his forties, lives with his sister Arantxa and his old mother in a remote part of rural Basque country. His is a monotonous life filled with nothing but farm work and a job at the local bicycle factory. It won't be long before Arantxa gets married and leaves home and then Ander will be left to look after their stubborn mother on his own. Then one day Ander has an accident and breaks his leg. His limb will be in a plaster cast for two months. Against his mother's wishes, the family decides to employ a Peruvian immigrant, José, in order to help out. The arrival of the new farm hand has an influence on interpersonal relationships within the family (Cineuropa).

IRRINTZIAREN OIHARTZUNAK

- On September 12 at 4:30 pm. Buy tickets.
- Directed by Iratxe Fresneda, 2016, 54 minutes, documentary.

Unknown to the general public, the Navarrese filmmaker Mirentxu Loyarte took on one of the most courageous and risky film projects in Spain in the 1970s: Irrintz (1978), a short film that questions identity collective of Basque citizenship. Almost 40 years later, the documentary Irrintziaren Oihartzunak (Echoes of the Irrintzi) returns to the subject of this work and its hidden truths.

AMAMA

- On September 13 at 9 pm. Buy tickets.
- Directed by Koldo Almandoz, 2018, 85 minutes, drama.

Khalil is a rootless young man who lives in the city's margins, where industrial estates bank onto the river and the marsh. He survives as well as he can, spending his days with a poacher who shares a house on the riverbank with a brother he has not talked to for years. On the shores of the marsh the tides mark the time for love and indifference, friendship and revenge.

HANDIA

- On September 15 at 9 pm. Buy tickets.
- Directed by Jon Garaño and Aitor Arregi, 2017, 114 minutes, historical drama.

Martín Eleizegi is an unwilling conscript in the First Carlist War. While fighting, he is injured and loses the use of his right arm. He returns to his family's small farm in the village of Altzo in the Basque Country, where he discovers his younger brother, Joaquin, has grown into a giant. Martín, longing to emigrate to America, sees the commercial opportunity in marketing the "tallest man on Earth." The brothers travel around Europe, despite Joaquin's increasing discomfort of being a freak attraction. Joaquin measures himself each night and is horrified that he continues to grow well into his twenties, and suffers from increasing aches and pains. He suspects that the condition is terminal.
